Means-Plus-Function Language in the Claims

Instant claim 31 contains the following means-plus-function recitation, “means for generating a magnetic field having a rotational component and an axial component to stir the volume of flowable material within said vessel” which is recited in proper means-plus-function format and which is defined in the specification as at least one stator capable of producing a complex spiral magnetomotive force field as recited on page 26 of the specification for example.

Double Patenting

Claim 31 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 101 as claiming the same invention as that of claim 1 of prior U.S. Patent No. 6,637,927. This is a double patenting rejection.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 102

The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(b) the invention was patented or described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country or in public use or on sale in this country, more than one year prior to the date of application for patent in the United States.

Claim 31 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by either of WO'678 or EP'676. Each of WO'678 and EP'676 teach a vessel containing a metallic melt (1 in WO'678 and 1 in EP 676) including a magnetic stirring means including both rotational and axial components (the magnetic fields shown by the force lines in the figures of either EP'676 and WO'678) thereby showing all aspects of the above claims.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claim 31 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Virolleau et al in view of Tostmann. Virolleau et al teaches a stator for the production of a magnetic field including both rotational and axial components for use in the stirring of liquid metallic melts (see col.1 lines 5-35 for example) thereby showing all aspects of the above claim except the specific deployment of the claimed means in association with a metallurgical melt holding vessel.

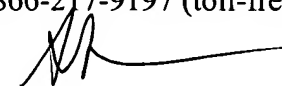

Tostmann teaches that at the time the invention was made it was well known in the melt stirring art to employ electromagnetic stator devices (see figure 1 for example) in connection with a molten metal vessel for stirring the molten metal within the vessel. Because Virolleau et al is specifically directed to the stirring of molten metals, motivation to employ the molten metal stirring device of Virolleau et al as the electromagnetic stirring device for the stirring of molten metals within a vessel, as taught by Tostmann to be a well known expedient in the molten metal stirring art, would have been a modification obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made.
